At the Periphery of Trees by Matt Hall

another ascent is observed stonily by the way water's cold reticence laps in fallen currents to salve the evidence of midlight's deleterious shoals

everything extends this want of colour resins wash ashore measures of landscapes recede to the ritual of this occasion bushfire surrounds them stalks barrenly across the sky in bloodlight somnolence finitudes loom over horizons how could it be otherwise

Matt Hall is working on a dissertation on J.H. Prynne and Violence at the University of Western Australia and a series of poetic essays that pertain to the radical pastoral. His poetry, occasional prose and criticism have been featured in journals around the world. The writers of greatest influence and intrigue to him are Prynne, Veronica Forrest-Thomson, Peter Larkin, Lisa Robertson, J Kinsella, John Wilkinson, Louis Armand, CD Wright, and Keston Sutherland.
