1994

Catherine Smith (Ed.)
Edith Cowan University

Copyright Warning

You may print or download ONE copy of this document for the purpose of your own research or study.

The University does not authorize you to copy, communicate or otherwise make available electronically to any other person any copyright material contained on this site.

You are reminded of the following:

- Copyright owners are entitled to take legal action against persons who infringe their copyright.

- A reproduction of material that is protected by copyright may be a copyright infringement. Where the reproduction of such material is done without attribution of authorship, with false attribution of authorship or the authorship is treated in a derogatory manner, this may be a breach of the author’s moral rights contained in Part IX of the Copyright Act 1968 (Cth).

- Courts have the power to impose a wide range of civil and criminal sanctions for infringement of copyright, infringement of moral rights and other offences under the Copyright Act 1968 (Cth). Higher penalties may apply, and higher damages may be awarded, for offences and infringements involving the conversion of material into digital or electronic form.
Work and Family
bibliography

1969-1994

editors
Catherine Smith
Lisbeth Pike
Acknowledgements

Special thanks are extended to Kate Loughton for her ongoing professional approach and assistance on keeping this project on track. Her desktop publishing skills have also proved invaluable.

The Women in Leadership Program at Edith Cowan University is acknowledged for financial support of the Bibliography.

The cartoons by Gaynor Gardner are taken from Balancing Acts Resource Kit available from the Equity Unit at Queensland University of Technology.
Profile of Edith Cowan University

Edith Cowan University (ECU) is named after Edith Cowan OBE who, in 1921, was the first woman member of an Australian Parliament. She was elected to the legislative assembly as the member for West Perth. Edith Cowan's work covered many areas including women's rights, the rights of children and access to child care for working women.

Edith Cowan University is located on five campuses in Perth and Bunbury in Western Australia, with over 17,000 enrolled students. The university caters for a great number of mature age students indicated by the median age of twenty five, and part-time students which make up approximately 35% of the student population. Flexible study programs allow students to combine work, study, family care and other interests.

Contributors

Associate Professor Catherine Smith
Department of Management

Lisbeth Pike
Senior Lecturer
Department of Psychology

Dr Dawn Butterworth
Chairperson
Department of Early Childhood Studies

Beverley Boyd
Senior Lecturer
Department of Consumer Science

Vivienne Ward
Lecturer
Department of Consumer Science

Linley Lord
Manager
Equal Employment Opportunity

Joy Hocking
Lecturer
Department of Management

Kate Loughton
Research Assistant
Equal Employment Opportunity

Jenny Ellis-Newman
Lecturer
Department of Financial Accounting

Janis Bailey
Lecturer
University of Western Australia
Table of Contents

Introduction .................................................. 1

Section A: The Work/Home Interface .................. 5

Section B: Family Issues ................................. 31

Section C: Household responsibilities: the implications of paid and unpaid work for family life .......... 45

Section D: Flexible Working Conditions ............ 59

Section E: Additional Resources ........................ 67
“It is certainly possible to have it all - to have a successful, rewarding career and still be an effective, loving mother. All you need is good planning and organisation - plus, of course a supportive husband, temperamentally easy children, four loving grandparents within a ten mile radius, a cleaning person, a gardener, a nanny, and 48 hours in a day.”

Introduction

ILO Convention 156

Australia has ratified the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Convention 156 on Workers with Family Responsibilities. This commits both Federal and State Governments to achieving effective equality and treatment of workers with family responsibilities.

In summary, Convention 156

- aims to prevent discrimination against those wishing to work and, insofar as it is possible, to engage in employment without conflict with their family responsibilities;

- stresses the right of free choice of employment and for workers’ needs to be taken into account in job conditions and in social security measures;

- requires that the family responsibilities of workers be considered in community planning and in the promotion and delivery of community services;

- requires that the principle of equal opportunity and treatment for men and women workers with family responsibilities be promoted to broaden public understanding of the issue;

- requires that the needs of workers with family responsibilities be taken into account in the design and delivery of vocational guidance and training; and

- prohibits family responsibilities as a reason for terminating employment.

Australia’s progress towards furthering compliance with each article of the Convention must be demonstrated in regular reports to the ILO.

International Year of the Family

1994 was designated by the United Nations as International Year of the Family, with the theme for the year as Family: resources and responsibilities in a changing world. The Year of the Family was intended to stimulate international, national and local actions to strengthen families as 'the smallest democracy at the heart of society'.

A better understanding of family rights and responsibilities may be achieved through a wider recognition of family issues among the public and private sectors and the community. The United Nations is keen to foster a greater awareness of the economic, social and demographic influences on the family.

In launching the International Year of the Family in Australia, the Government emphasised that families have their own unique needs, and that Government programmes will continue to recognise the diversity of family forms and meet all their diverse needs.

Edith Cowan University recognised the International Year of the Family by undertaking a range of activities designed to promote discussion and debate. The range of activities recognised the University's role as an educator, employer and community member. This Bibliography represents just one of the activities undertaken by Edith Cowan University in 1994.

The majority of adults, including those with dependent children, are now in paid employment, leading to a new partnership in the income-earning tasks of family is emerging. Of particular significance is the increase in women's participation in the paid workforce over the past three decades. This has generated important national and international research contributions, especially in the areas of employment, careers and family life.

The Bibliography aims to provide assistance for researchers, students, employers and other interested parties by making available, in one publication, significant contributions to the work and family debates over the past twenty five years.

According to Edgar (1994, p.4), the majority of adults with dependent children are in paid employment: 86% of fathers and 56% of mothers in two-parent families; 65% of male and 43% of female sole parents. In 1993, 53% of couples with dependent children were both employed (both full-time in 42% of cases). Some 43% of employed men and 40% of employed women have dependent children. Thus a new partnership in the income-earning tasks of family is emerging.
Structure of the Bibliography

The bibliography is divided into four sections:

Section A covers literature on the work/home interface

Section B relates to the area of family issues

Section C includes literature relating to household responsibilities, and the implications for family life of paid and unpaid work

Section D provides references on flexible working conditions

Section E refers to reports, organisations and additional resources relating to work and family
Section A

The Work/Home Interface

Any woman who has a career and a family automatically develops something in the way of two personalities, like two sides of a dollar bill each different in design .... Her problem is to keep one from draining the life from the other.

Ivy Baker Priest, Green Grows Ivy (1958)
Section A The Work/Home Interface

The success or failure of an organisation is largely attributable to the way it manages its workforce, and the key to competitive advantage lies in policy levers which maximise employee potential and flexibility. Major changes in the labour force characteristics over the past three decades have resulted in significantly more women not only in the workforce but pursuing careers. Families operate as social systems, with an inter-relationship between work and non-work roles, so that tensions in one are transferred to the other. The steadily increasing number of dual-career families has generated a growing interest in the relationships between work and home and the practical organisational implications of the stresses and strains imposed by multiple and often conflicting demands.

As dual-career couples become more prevalent, employees' conflicting demands of home and work are exacerbated when both partners strive for upward career progression, and the resulting pressures may adversely affect their work performance, since home and work cannot be compartmentalised. The literature contained within this section shows that more flexible employer response to the work/home interface can achieve more effective utilisation of human resources, generating both individual and organisational benefits.
I'm a workaholic proud of it, and expect it of my staff!

He's either from a dysfunctional family or developing one.

Department of Human Services and Health, Child Care for the 1990's - Meeting the Need Together. Information Kit. Canberra: AGPS.

Section A The Work/Home Interface

Section A

The Work/Home Interface

Office of the Status of Women (1989). Child Care in the Workplace: Cost benefit study of employer-provided child care, Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, Canberra: AGPS.

Section A

The Work/Home Interface

25

Section B

Family Issues

Intimacy between step-children and step-parents is indeed proverbially difficult

Lady Murasaki The Tale of Genji (c. 1008)
Section B: Family Issues

Australian families have undergone significant changes in terms of their composition and structure over the last decade or so. Many of these changes have been precipitated by the increase in the incidence of divorce with the implementation of the Family Law Act of 1975. The Act saw the introduction of “no fault” divorce legislation into the Australian legal system.

From data presented in the August 1993 issue of Family Matters, the magazine published by the Australian Institute of Family Studies, the statistics suggest that currently about 40% of all marriages can be expected to end in divorce. Children are inevitably caught up in this statistic and it is estimated that 3.9% of Australian children will have experienced the divorce of their parents by the time they are five years old.

As adults move in and out of relationships, children and adults variably experience adjustment to single parenthood, defacto relationships, or stepfamilies with the often attendant discourse and conflict about finances, accommodation and custody arrangements. These adjustments confront adults and children with a range of emotional and social changes and challenges.

On the other hand, many are considering the advantages as well as the disadvantages of parenthood either with or without a formal marriage commitment and finding that this in itself presents its own set of challenges.

Meanwhile, in common with all parents, parents in the “traditional” nuclear family share the concerns about how they can provide the best opportunities for the development of their children, from the preschool years through to adolescence.

In the face of all this change, notions of what constitute normative as opposed to non normative life transitions, disadvantage versus challenge are keenly debated in the research literature.

The 1990s are indeed an interesting time for those who study family issues!
CAN'T MAKE THE PUB, JUSTIN'S TEETHING - HOW ABOUT AFTERNOON TEA AT MY PLACE?

NETWORKING IS OFTEN A PROBLEM FOR SINGLE PARENTS

Section C

Household Responsibilities:

The Implications of Paid and Unpaid Work for Family Life

Here lies a poor woman who always was tired
For she lived in a place where help wasn't hired
Her last words on earth were, Dear friends I am going
Where washing ain't done nor sweeping, nor sewing,
And everything there is exact to my wishes
For they don't eat and there's no washing of dishes...
Don't mourn for me now, don't mourn for me ever
For I'm going to nothing for ever and ever.

Epitaph in Bushy churchyard before 1860, destroyed by 1916, quoted in a letter to the Spectator, September 2, 1922.
Section C: Household Responsibilities

Implications of paid and unpaid work for family life

With more women opting for paid full-time employment, there has been a growing interest in research related to the distribution of household work among family members. Research over the last twenty years has shown little change in the patterns of responsibilities for home duties despite the increased hours women are spending away from the family home. The literature included in this section expands on these findings.

The average age of women in Australia giving birth to their first child has been steadily increasing. Many women may be making decisions about childbirth and related factors as a result of personal work and career goals. These decisions are likely to impact on a variety of issues such as those related to the management of household work, care of dependents, and the wellbeing of the family members as a whole. A list of references which relate to household responsibilities including the impact of combining paid work and parenting on family well-being / quality of life and research issues (other than medical matters) related to delayed parenting are also included.

Individual well-being or quality of life is often affected by the way in which work and family responsibilities are combined, and therefore literature which is relevant to an understanding of these concepts and the ways in which it may be measured are also listed.
THE GREAT JUGGLING ACT

Section C

Household Responsibilities

Section D

Flexible Working Conditions

If people are highly successful in their profession they lose their senses. Sight goes. They have no time to look at pictures. Sound goes. They have no time to listen to music. Speech goes. They have no time for conversation. They have lost their sense of proportion—the relations between one thing and another. Humanity goes.

Virginia Woolf, Three Guineas (1938)
Section D: Flexible Working Conditions

Changes in workforce demographics over the past thirty years have been dramatic. The traditional family model of male breadwinner with dependent wife and children at home no longer applies to the majority of Australian families. In fact, more than half of two parent households with dependent children have both parents in the paid workforce.

As well as responsibility for dependent children increasing numbers of having workers also have elder care responsibilities. Currently, women carry greater responsibility for unpaid caregiving undertaking 70% of unpaid work in Australian households (Bittman 1991). However, men are increasingly seeking greater workplace flexibility to enable them to spend more time with their children. Many industrial awards now include provisions not only for maternity leave but also for up to twelve months unpaid paternity leave.

There is a growing recognition by employers that the demands of work and family can result in conflict for employees. This can lead to increases in turnover, absenteeism and other stresses which are costly for organisations.

An increasing number of Australian organisations have recognised the dual roles of their employees, by the introduction of flexible work policies which aim at providing a better balance of conflicting responsibilities. Other forms of assistance provided by employers include provision of childcare, family leave, information and referral services, and salary packaging.

Changes such as these are seen by organisations as not only meeting employee needs but also providing a competitive advantage. Improvements in productivity, increased ability to attract and retain staff, and reduction in absenteeism have been identified as key elements in providing that advantage.

Flexible work arrangements are also increasingly being included in industrial and enterprise agreements as employers recognise that the majority of employees also have family responsibilities and that organisations which help provide the balance between work and family are acknowledged to be providing a model of best practice.
WE'RE TESTING ALL SUPERVISORS ON THEIR WORKFORCE FLEXIBILITY

Department of Industrial Relations (1993). Workplace Bargaining: The First 1000 Agreements, Canberra: AGPS.

Section E

Additional Resources

Family life! The United Nations is child's play compared to the tugs and splits and need to understand and forgive in any family

May Sarton, Kinds of Love (1970)
Another Tuesday Night [videorecording] (1992). Office for the Status of Women, Department for the Prime Minister and Cabinet, Canberra: AGPS.

Family: Human Relationships, Values and the Community; A comprehensive collection of films and videos on family issues, including:

- Independence and the Family
- Society and the Individual
- Families in Crisis
- The Twentieth Century Family

Available from the Australian Film Institute
Tel: (03) 696 1844 or (02) 322 2299
Fax: (03) 696 7972 or (02) 331 7145

National Council for the International Year of the Family (1994). The Heart of the Matter: Families at the Centre of Public Policy, Canberra: AGPS.

Section E

Additional Resources

On Any Wednesday [videorecording] (1993). Office for the Status of Women, Department for the Prime Minister and Cabinet, Canberra: AGPS.

Work and Family Unit 1992, Corporate Work and Family Awards '92, Department of Industrial Relations, Canberra.

Work and Family Unit
Commonwealth Department of Industrial Relations
GPO Box 9879
Canberra City
ACT 2601

[Publishes Work & Family newsletter]

Australian Institute of Family Studies
300 Queen Street
Melbourne
VICTORIA 3000

[Publishes Family Matters magazine]

The Australian Institute of Family Studies promotes the identification and understanding of factors affecting marital and family stability in Australia by:

• researching and evaluating the social, legal and economic well-being of all Australian families.

• informing Government and the policy making process about Institute findings

• communicating the results of Institute and other family research to organisations concerned with family well-being and to the wider general community.

• promoting improved support for families including measures which prevent family disruption and enhance marital and family stability.
Recognising that a lot of its valued employees are caregivers, the company is exploring ways of providing information and support to these employees to prevent stress, exhaustion and loss of productivity, so they don't have to choose between family responsibility and a satisfying worklife.

Signed

Don't let me wake up!