Munibung

Jan Dean

Follow this and additional works at: https://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is posted at Research Online.
Munibung by Jan Dean

You’re worn down to the word hill.
I can’t resist calling you a mountain for that special way it moves my lips and tongue. Elsewhere you might not rate. Who could guess you have such credentials?

Part of a volcano, you licked lava, bubbling from deep within the earth. Perhaps you swayed to the thunder of dinosaurs.

A sweep of my pencil with a dip two thirds in at the ridge, just above those rocks & caves, hidden from view would draw you from here. Eucalypts crowd after welcome rain as if an underground pact murmurs through their roots: remainders flourish to compensate for damage from bulldozers at your base. You dictate the contours those devils take.

For years I’ve watched you endure dry winds, fire & torrents. You forgive, gaze south to our mighty lake, toss shawls of morning mists over your shoulder.

Jan Dean’s poetry collection With One Brush, which connects art and memoir, was published by Interactive Press as winner of its Best First Book competition in 2007 and short-listed in the 2008 Mary Gilmore Award. Her publication credits include the Australian, Blue Dog, Catchfire Press, Hecate and Southerly. Recently her poetry appeared in The Night Road (the 2009 Newcastle Poetry Prize anthology), Eucalypt: a tanka journal (issue 7) and Water (an e-journal of poetry and music) issue 1.