Tales Four Metres Deep

Michelle Leber

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is posted at Research Online.
Tales Four Metres Deep by Michelle Leber

Underwater days painted blue.
You would dive off the point, swim
the reef to Melissa's Ledge.
The snakelock anemones
were greener than sea-velvet, slippery as glass. Sometimes inside the eel-meadow, long reeds would catch thundering flippers, slow us down. That eleven-armed sea-star clamped tight onto a mussel;

even though you saw the final tug—its somersaulting heart like your own misadventure, you swum on.

And when summer ended
you became fearless.
Just like that pod of striped old wives reclaiming their pride, wiser to reef drops.

Some years later, I would swim with you again.
Still that familiar concern for the lost bathyal fish—reduced to skeleton. Its formless head stuck in the same bull-kelp cavern.

Michelle Leber has been a guest at local poetry readings, festivals and community engagements. Her work has appeared in The Best Australian Poems 2009 (Black Inc), The Age, Meanjin, Cordite, ecology bulletins, high school texts and on trains. She was selected for the LongLines Poetry workshop at Varuna in 2009. Her book The Weeping Grass is to be published by the Australian Poetry Centre in 2010.