faith in engineering by Scott-Patrick Mitchell

. schism shivers a throb. feet me ferry. as passenger the sea will roll back inland, goal to kiss the cusp of me.

wave & skip the wet from side to side, north to south

, jetty meets i. lankily aboard , don instructions to save my drowning self if occurred. awash in the light from the sand built nightward, i gurgle home. a white on red space invader mosaic – put in place by the french artist himself – laps above the tide , seeks & plays. spot to score 60ty points more. with water stained ticket to ride, the algae blooms, spores explore & confide

, this wet land we both infiltrate

, imbibe, here in between we are faith in engineering, float the stream

Scott-Patrick Mitchell is a poet and writes for OUTinPerth. He's the editor of the incredibly irregular yet utterly underground literary street art zine MoTHER [has words...] plus the winner of the 2009 PressPress Chapbook Award. In 2010 he will be appearing in major collections being published by both Fremantle Press and Puncher & Wattman, all the while studying for his Masters in performance poetry at Edith Cowan University.
