Nine O'Clock Sun, Dwellingup

Josephine Clarke
Nine o’clock sun, Dwellingup by Josephine Clarke a bush track in the spotlight of a nine o’clock sun - a new green re leaf of early autumn tree trunks a grey palisade this bush a monitored garden: gentle restraint in an order Darwin named unexpected a swastika - black smear on a tree trunk slaps me like a branding black paint on the trunk that grains up to a silver flaying of branches scraping at sky

the tree has wept its bark to the ground like skin scratched and shed after rape by a white master in a nine o’clock sun a swastika screams black on the trunk of a dead jarrah which has pared away its bark and in its protest the tree is shining like armour in this war against the empowered twisting of love into torture

I step away and am returned to the profusion of restraint everything growing in its place colours falling like a fountain on the air

Josephine Clarke lives and writes in Fremantle. Her short stories and poetry have been published in indigo, Blue Giraffe, Thirst, Creatrix and Eureka Street. Jo Clarke was President of Out of the Asylum (OOTA) writers’ group from 2006-2009.