Ecological Misfortunes of a Bay

Helen Hagemann

Follow this and additional works at: https://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Retrieved from https://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes/vol4/iss1/14

This Poetry is posted at Research Online.
https://ro.ecu.edu.au/landscapes/vol4/iss1/14
Ecological Misfortunes of a Bay by Helen Hagemann

On the sand I read: "No fishing, crabbing, prawning", before I see 'fine' the word exactly right for today's forecast. But then, there is rock, a breakwall, and crabs are dependant on rocks as mossy edges or grottos to spawn.

A portrait of home and the land is pulling away from the shore. Each edge an erosion of dunes, shoals.

I take a walk on narrow sand, look at landmarks I once knew. The past returns like a creeping tide, November rendezvous with December, dreamy towels of youth. Father arriving upstream, large snapper anchored against his coveralls. The bilge water washing gills, proffered to pelicans, gulls.

How to inhabit this space again, to understand the ecology of change, the forced greetings to locals without conversation, words sinking like tackle into an afternoon breeze. We meet the disappointed, an Italian neighbour dark on the Shire for higher rates. A long silence follows. He folds the bill into his pocket, shoring up his strife.

Along the esplanade, history floats back with a strong nor'easterly, fishermen returning home with sacks of fish, crabs, prawns. You want this starting with today, not just a painting on the wall, but a channel deepening itself with prawns, bloodworms, cormorants arriving with their dewy outlook from feeble swamps.

The bay could be become large again, budding with life, kites circling on a ramp of air, families staying till dusk, children swathed in salt, mothers thinking of dawn, the bay's mist infusing time and space.
These are only thoughts that float like wing on thermal. Thirty years on and there’s not one crab, not a claw drying on rock. You can only hope for a grittiness of shore to return curved and flinty, feet roving a line of spinifex and dune beyond this punitive sign that makes the bay just a pothole to sink into, a nothing coast.

Helen Hagemann has prose and poetry published in Australian Literary magazines, including Overland, Island, Westerly and Southerly. She is an award-winning poet having won a Varuna Publishing Scholarship in 2008. As part of that program, her first literary collection Evangelyne & Other Poems was published by the Australian Poetry Centre in their New Poets Series 2009. Helen holds an MA in Writing from Edith Cowan University, and teaches poetry and prose in Fremantle in affiliation with Out of the Asylum Writers Group.