From Higher Town, St Agnes, Looking Towards Cove Vean

Lawrence Upton

Recommended Citation
From Higher Town, St Agnes, Looking Towards Cove Vean

by Lawrence Upton

An impression is of forest, without contradictory clear signs of a garden nor the well-kept fields in view. One doubts though any deliberation. It just is.

The trees near in are cut back, disallowed from taking charge as in folk fantasy where a realm of growing wood excludes one and self-interested regulation.

Down among such deep green, the one pigeon is chanting; and, far across the valley, chorister-voice birds outloud the gull screeches.

None here though. Palm trees are not really them. Urchin gangs of tits, not the soloists. Wind, the distant song, the sea – all half still.