Walking on Scilly

by Lawrence Upton

One can’t be said to walk here as one can of that setting free on the wide Cornish mainland.
There isn’t room. A few steps and the rock makes way for sea. Naturally, left to the self, connection is by boat; and has been since two islands became an archipelago, garlic chopped and chopped again by wet knives;

or ground cover and its life on cleared land;
and we are as small arthropods, not sure what’s happening, unable to conceptualise the forces cutting us up. And yet there’s space.

I’ve dropped the mass production of affect!

I walk more slowly than I have yet done.
I spend more time upon my arse than’s good for the fatty heart; but I am observant

when I am stumbling forward, round the stones.
In lieu of space, I go through age layers or think I do. Time’s peculiar here though many want to make it beg and roll.

It has its sacred gardens and passages for which I am self-licensed and alert.

One goes out through many tangled eras,
ideas’ overgrown achievements derelict,
into territory nowadays undimensioned.
