Bird Hide

Parry Lagoons Nature Reserve (comb-crested Jacana: irediparra gallinacea) we drive a stony path, trail Telegraph Hill pass another boab until we find the hide, ramping it to see a brolga waiting for her picture to be taken mazed in lagoon's storied light

Marlgu sanctioned waterlilies, billabong lipped flowers cream, some deep, deep pink where egrets, magpie geese, finches, too all manner of waders feed on evening light but it was the lotus bird, that floating Jacana picking her way on fine legs to walk on water stepping from one waterlily to another pecking seeds on the belly of the flower's great leaf that left us mouthing more!

we could have watched for hours, such a poise photographing her crested-comb, the waders and her kind, starring step-by-step feeding in reflective light the birds seemingly unaware-our awe, our eyes, slit hide to see floodplain
the day encroaching night the wet a season away
