CARP MOUNTAINS

The mountains are my skin and bone,
Weigh down my belly,
Womb, flower dark
Inside iron blood.
They suck the sun,
Speak stars,
Make fire every dawn.
Serpent fleshy, they
Brew fogs in pine trees,
Split rock into tongues,
Are silk silent in purple and gold,
Stick stone feet
Into curled sea.
The mountains braid atoms
Into sand, pull black winged birds
From my hair, from burnt lips.
In caves mountains mould phantoms
From fossils, winds and roots.

They control rain,

Howl at every moon,

Salt their minerals

Into my pearled eyes.
