love poems

edited by

Liana Joy Christensen

The poems in this anthology have been selected by Liana Joy Christensen from work by invited poets performing at Poetry d'Amour 2014, and from entries in the 2014 Poetry d'Amour Love Poetry Competition. Liana Joy Christensen judged the competition and kindly offered editorial suggestions.
Philogyny #2

How to explain? Opening up your glory
Box last night (I make no apology)
Engrossed by memorabilia, story,
Or, put in another anthology:

Peeling back the petals of your flower
I find a pattern. Antipodes’
Lilies have a fringe. Remember
Forms found in nature designed to please.

And bearded iris, also known as orrisroot;
The only iris to possess a scent.
Spicy? Musky? Floral? The point is moot,
Furred sepals fall and make it redolent.

To be a cunning linguist’s all I have,
I lick you and beseech you: please don’t shave.
