(Lights off except spot.) Spot on Narrator.

Narrator: As time passed, and the Sun rose many times, Luemba and Mavunga grew up. Luemba was handsome and happy — always friendly and smiling. He had many friends. But Mavunga was bad tempered and cruel — he never smiled, and nobody smiled at him.

(Lights up.)

Children enter left, and play game in centre.

Mother: (at door of hut)
Boys — please pick some bananas for our meal.

Mavunga: No! Do it yourself!

Mother: I wonder what’s happened to Mavunga. He never used to be so bad-tempered.

Child 1: Do you want to play with us Mavunga?

Child 2: Come on Mavunga, come and join our game.

Mavunga: No! Don’t want to play your game!

Children: Alright — we’ll play by ourselves.

Scene: Boat right; trees take up new positions along river bank.

(Lights up, as Mavunga creeps down to boat—from right—and starts journey.)

Narrator: Mavunga quietly crept down to the river, where he found his Mother’s canoe. Quickly he pushed it into the water and paddled down the dark, unfriendly river — away from his home, and all the things he knew and loved.

Glockenspiels glissando during narration.

Chorus: Song of Travel

During verse 2, the two birds enter left and dart, screeching across stage — off right.

During verse 3, the crocodile enters left, and snaps its way off right.

Mavunga reaches tree (Magic Tree) left of centre. Princess is in centre of group with hands stretched upwards — children in circle with hands also up to join Princess.

I'd better go fast, they frighten me,
Oh can I hear something up in the sky,
An enormous bird goes screeching by,

I wish the night would turn to day,
Oh can I hear something down in the water,
A horrible crocodile come to slaughter.
Spot on Narrator — other lights dim.

Narrator: Mavunga crouched in the canoe, overcome by fear and weariness. As the canoe bumped against something Mavunga started up to find a tree so bushy that he could not pass. The tree made strange noises, and as Mavunga listened, he heard —

Voices of Leaves: Pick the leaves...
Let us free...
Help us please...
We're trapped you see....

Mavunga picks the leaves one by one.

Leaves bow to Mavunga as they become people — and pass right.

Leaves: (in turn) Thank you for setting us free.

Leaves: Last is the Princess, and as she comes before Mavunga he and the people drop to one knee before her.

Princess touches Mavunga's head, and he rises — followed by the people.

Princess: Thank you for freeing me and my people. An evil spirit put a spell on us long ago, and turned me into a tree, and my people into leaves.

(Princess sees how ugly Mavunga is.)

Princess: (Touching magic charm at her neck.) Now that Mavunga has saved us, I will change him into a handsome prince — and he will be my husband.

Tingly tingly tingly tu,
Magic charm, what will you do?

(Mavunga has gone into centre of group, and new steps out in a beautiful cloak, and without the ugly mask.)

Chorus: Song of Joy (Verses 1 and 2).

Act 2, Scene 1

Black out. Spot on Narrator.

Narrator: Together Mavunga and the Princess, and her people journeyed on until the river widened, and here they stopped. This, they decided, was the place to live. The Princess once again touched her magic charm, and on the river bank a magnificent village grew up. Here Mavunga and the Princess would be married.

Orchestra: Dance (Song of Joy)
During this the people of the village dance.
Mavunga and the Princess move down centre after dance.
Princess: Here we will stay
In this jungle glade,
But first, my husband you'll be made.
Promise Mavunga, never to tell
The secret of my magic spell.

Mavunga: You have given me wealth and beauty,
To keep your secret will be my duty.

Princess: With this charm our pledge is complete.

Mavunga: Your secret I will forever keep.

(Princess places charm about Mavunga's neck.)

Priest: comes forward — joins Mavunga and Princess's hands touch twice (hands)
touch twice (heads)
Spreads arms.

Priestess gives garland.

Princess and Mavunga dance.

Orchestra plays Song of Joy as at Act 2, Scene 1.

Chorus: Song of Joy (Verse 3 and Coda).

Lights fade — dancers move back.
See Mavunga there he stands
Weds the Princess of our land,
Oh what a happy day this is,
Oh what a happy day this is,
day this is see our Princess happy now. Joined in marriage to her King Oh what a happy happy day this is Joined in marriage to her King Oh what a happy day this is.
Act 2, Scene 2

Narrator: Time passed, and Mavunga was happy with his new friends. The sun crossed the sky many times, night followed day, and month followed month.
(Mime sun crosses stage.)

Day by day Mavunga began to feel homesick. He longed to see his Mother, and to speak to his brother Luemba. He wished to share his good fortune with them.
(Mavunga mimes dejection — Princess gestures towards him.)

Mavunga: I wish I could see my Mother again
To tell her I'm sorry for causing her pain.
My brother Luemba I want to see too
To bring them here is the thing to do.
(Mavunga beckons messenger.)

I want you to go and bring my people to me.
(Messenger goes off right.)

Chorus: Chant with drum.

Mime: Mavunga and family embrace. Mavunga takes his Mother and Luemba to meet the Princess.

Narrator: Mavunga's Mother became very curious about her handsome son, and the mysterious Princess.

Mother: Mavunga my son, you are so changed... Where did these people find you? What is this charm? Who are these people? Tell me my son—please do.

Luemba: You have beauty—you have wealth—share with us too.

Mavunga: No—I promised—I must not say.

Scene change music — Song of Travel (two verses).

Scene: Mavunga's old home at right side of stage. Princess and her people at left side of stage. Forest of trees centre stage.

Narrator: After his people had gone home, life went on as before for Mavunga. The sun crossed the sky many times. Night followed day, month followed month. Still Mavunga was not completely happy. He felt homesick for his own people.

Mavunga: No matter how I try, even as the months go by, I long for my own people again.

Princess: Mavunga — why do you grieve? I’ve given you so much, but you wish to leave.

Mavunga: My heart is sad, for my home I long. Here I have friendship, but the call of my people is strong.

Princess: Then you must go, and make up your mind. Remember your promise — or returning you’ll find...

All: NOTHING!!!

Mavunga departs — winding through the trees.

Narrator: Mavunga travelled back up the river, through the jungle, towards his home.

Chorus: Song of Expectation.
SONG OF EXPECTATION

This river is long and winding so many trees in my way.

Song of Expectation

This river is long and winding
So many trees in my way
I hope the water is clear ahead
For to my home I must go.
It is so long since I've been home
The place where I was born,
Oh how I long to hear again
The voices I have known.

There is so much to tell them
Of my travels and my past
I want to share with them the joy
That's been my happy life.
Spot on Narrator.

Narrator: At last Mavunga saw the familiar hut and his friends of old by the river bank. Everyone was happy to see him.

Mother: Welcome my son, at last you’ve come.

Luemba: We missed you Mavunga, our home was sad without you.

Mavunga: My heart was sad, I had to come to see you just once more.

All: Let us dance,
    Let us sing and cheer
    This is a happy day
    Mavunga is here!!!

All Mavunga's people dance to Magic Spell Song Interlude.

Mother: Remember the question I asked you Mavunga? How did you change from what you were?

Luemba: Where did you meet that Princess? Where did you find that charm?

Mother: Tell us Mavunga, it can do no harm.

Mavunga: Yes, I will tell you. The Princess will never know. When I ran away, I found a canoe in the river. I travelled down the river until I came to a large tree. I pulled the leaves off the tree, and each leaf became a person. I wed the Princess of the Magic Tree, and she made a magnificent village. I have been very happy there . . .

Princess is seen in the light, near trees at left. As she touches the charm the light comes onto her village, and Spirits run about — to Magic Spell Interlude music — then sink to the floor.

The story we've told is over,
Mavunga is home once more —
His people are glad to welcome him
And talk with him as before.
The Princess and her people all
To dreamtime have returned,

And how for home he yearned.

Back through the forest glades,
To where his loved ones wait for him
And fears long passed will fade.
